ALONG THE WAPITI

By Janus
Everything fine in this district.

We had the pleasure of attending one of the most successful banquets sponsored by the Legion on Armistice day, that has taken place for years. They were from all over the district and the Donalds who attended. Jack Redmond, the general president, gave up his chair at the table. Also Charlie Turner, who was master of ceremonies at the smoker in the club afterwards.

Frank Donald surprised himself in the speech placed before them and the run punch deserves particular mention.

D. W. Patterson occupied the chair and after a few short addresses interspersed by community and old veterans singing, led by J. W. Pickard, they all adjourned to the club for a smoker and concert much enjoyed by all and everyone was there.

We were more than pleased by the tremendous spontaneous cheering and applause that greeted our old friend and comrade Dr. O'Brien, when he rose to speak. Cheers after cheers rang out and only after singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" and three hearty cheers was he able to speak. And it was well so, because no one has to be led after the interests of the returned men in this country.

When will these half-baked university students and would-be pacifists with power at any price, realize you cannot have peace with the whole world preparing for war? But there is one consolation. The King in time of trouble has still the brave old boys, and they would go. The aeroplanes of war of Italy would not have a helpless, defenseless negro population to steam over. They would have many Colonel Blimps, of which breed they lack, entitled to knock the supreme hell out of them.

The credit for breaking away from a mixed banquet on Armistice Day rested entirely with the president, Jack Redmond, and his executive. A dance will be given later for the ladies. (When the attendance jumps from 30 to 40 returned men to 130, it speaks for itself.)

Congratulations to the officers of the Grande Prairie Legion. May they all be returned to office for another year to arrange for the opening of a club.

From our district attended: A. K. Watts, Ed Woods, J. C. Maclean, Geo. A. Hearn, J. Murray, Tom Brumpton, six out of seven returned men, Bill Hosker and Harold Howser, transportation.

Dimdale also sent a full quota.

Mrs. J. C. Maclean and Mrs. Davis took in the picture show last Saturday in Grande Prairie.

Mr. and Mrs. Trimble and Mrs. J. C. Maclean left for Manitoba by car to visit relatives.

Coal is moving freely from the mines to town.

A. K. Watts personally paid expenses of our run. Bill Hosker and several others attended to banquet and smoker. (Congratulations.)

Here's waiting for another November 11th.

CAPITOL

SPECTACULAR DRAMA IN "A TALE OF TWO CITIES"

The brilliant pages of an immortal novel come to life on the screen of the Capitol Theatre starting Thursday, November 12, when Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's magnificent production, "A Tale of Two Cities," opens a three-day engagement. Romantic fiction is stored in the unforgettable role of Sidney Carton. With him appear a cast of truly all-star players, including such favorites as Elizabeth Allan, Edna May Oliver, Reginald Kegan Paul, Katherine, Blanche, Cooke, Henry B. Walthall, Donald Woods, Walter Catlett, Fritz Leiber, R. B. Warner, Mitchell Lewis, Claude Rains, Billy Bevan, Isabel Jewell, Lucille Laverne, Tully Marshall, and almost one hundred other great players.

This is the second of Charles Dickens' works to reach the screen from the M-G-M studios. The first was "David Copperfield," an international sensation. Now "A Tale of Two Cities" appears even that classic work in romantic, epic, dramatic and spectacular production. Set against a vivid background of London in France in the late eighteenth century, the story singles out a group of characters who are swept into their adventures, their joys and their sorrows through a period of fifteen years.

Those familiar with the book will find it faithfully translated into action on the screen. Those who do not know the book will find that it contains every element of entertainment and on such a scale as the screen has attempted but seldom. Six thousand extra players were used in scenes of the most spectacular sequence, notably the storming of the Bastille by the revolutionaries, the scene which has made this the finest performance of its kind in the history of the motion picture. "A Tale of Two Cities" comes to the screen as one of the most entertaining, most moving and most important photoplays of all time.

"TROUBLE FOR TWO" HAS NEW ROMANTIC TEAM

Something out of the ordinary run of film has come to the Capitol Theatre, Monday, November 12, with the presentation of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new romantic adventure drama, "Trouble for Two," co-starring Robert Montgomery and Ronald Russell, with Frank Morgan, Reginald Owen and Louis Hayward in the supporting cast.

Based on "The Suicide Club," a story by Robert Louis Stevenson, the picture tells the story of a man and a woman who, bored with the rituals and trappings of a real existence, set out to find a new life and adventure and find themselves, instead, involved in a sinister organization known as the Suicide Club, and designed solely for the perpetration of murder.

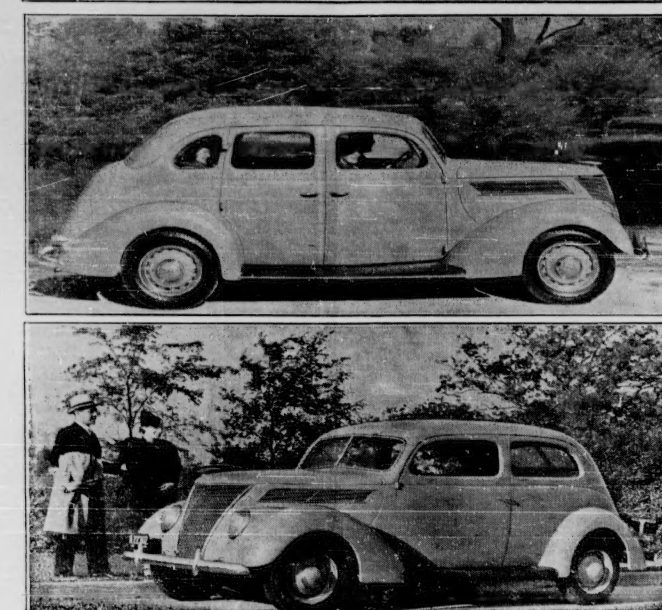

By a trick of fate Miss Russell is chosen as the instrument by whose hand Montgomery's death is to be achieved. It is the man in which she extricates herself from this strange predicament and serves instead to rescue the man who loves which gives this tale its wealth of suspense, thrills, unusual details and romantic excitement.

JOE LOUIS' VICTORY OVER SHARKE SHOWN IN FILM

Before 30,000 roaring fans at the Yankee Stadium in late August, Joe Louis, lithe and sleek as a panther, put the finishing touches on an expertly timed knockout in the eighth round. The fight lasted one minute and two seconds after the third round got in progress.

The newspapers and magazines that no wonder the smiling are afraid. They are afraid because they only get hold of a general indefinite idea that a great many mothers die at the time of childbirth. Now that is not true. All good doctors know that mothers should not die at that time, and if only the mother goes to the doctor in time, as soon as she thinks perhaps she is going to be a mother, and keeps on going to see the doctor regularly, all done what he tells her, generally speaking, she is safe. Pre-natal care is the greatest safeguard we have. Last century (and it is the same now) doctors used to feel that they ought to have at least one thousand maternal deaths without losing one mother, and a great many of them succeeded in making this fact well known both then and now. And they make better records now. Our national record shows that we are all trying to make it better, and now we have a new idea about how to make it better.

The greatest single cause of maternal mortality is what used to be called child-bed fever, or puerperal fever, or sepsis. In Canada it causes about one-third or more of all our maternal mortality. But remember, very few mothers have it or any other trouble at the time of the birth of the baby.

In 1933, Dr. J. Smith of Aberdeen City Hospital laboratory made a study of 21 cases of puerperal fever and was able to find the germs which caused the fever in 18 of these cases. It also found out where these deadly germs came from. Most of them were the common germs that are found in common colds.

In a few cases he found that the germs came from the patient herself, sometimes from her nose or throat. In 12 cases the germs came from the mother or nurse or doctor, or nurse or one of the medical students who attended the case.

This gave us a new idea. We saw how to prevent puerperal fever. We saw how to prevent the mother and nurse from carrying the germs, and how to prevent the germs from getting into the mother's body.

We saw how to prevent the mother and nurse from carrying the germs, and how to prevent the germs from getting into the mother's body. We saw how to prevent the mother and nurse from carrying the germs, and how to prevent the germs from getting into the mother's body.

A NEW IDEA

"I am almost afraid to leave this baby." Here are those words in the expectant mother's letter and we must all be able to understand them.

Tell the people. But there has been so much about maternal mortality in the newspapers and magazines that no wonder the smiling are afraid.

They are afraid because they only get hold of a general indefinite idea that a great many mothers die at the time of childbirth. Now that is not true.
